About the Lecture

The talk will highlight the challenges in India's employment, employability and education regime and throw up possible solutions. It will also try to make connections between the 3E's and will make the case that is that India does not have a jobs problem but a wages problem. Fundamentally the productivity challenge means recognizing that the government is organized vertically but this problem needs thinking horizontally. Despite 1 million kids joining the labour force every month for 10 years, it makes the case that the demographic dividend is a real possibility.
